SPOREN RIQUEWIHR

ZELLENBERG

At 275 metres of altitude, the Sporen forms a natural cirque, its gentle slopes facing south-east.

Its soil is made up of Lias clay-marl, decalcified on the surface, exceptionally rich in phosphoric acid, a factor of seasonal earliness, itself a sign of quality. Its deep soils protect against drought in years of low rainfall, allowing the vine roots to explore the soil and extract all the trace elements which contribute to the complexity of its wines.

Covering 23,70 ha, the Sporen is principally planted with Gewurztrammer and Tokay Pinot Gris.

The archives of the Dukes of Wurtemberg first mention the Sporen in 1432. In 1580, Fischart gave the Sporen first place among Alsace wines : «Doch gegen den Reichenweier Sporen haben Sie alle das Spiel verloren». Its wines have been sold under the vineyard name for centuries.

Sporen wines are characterised by their finesse and class, richness allied to elegance. They age remarkably well.
